In 1840 there was quite a galaxy of feminine talent in Paris engaged in the intrigues to patch up a Franco-Russian alliance against Eugland. Princess Lieven stood a head and shoulders above any of them. She was not the first lady of that name who had meddled with affairs of State. Her husband's mother that funding bill, tecause I have a bond or two myself. (He has $5,000,000 in government bords). "Well," said Daggett, "your democratic friends would insist on pressing that bill. It has taken up time, and done a good deal of injury." "I didn't know that! "Oh, yes, "said Daggett, "it comes from the Democratic side." "Well, now, that is queer," said with affairs of State. Her husband's mother

Christopharovna did not positively dictate his dispatches, as some people said she did, we know that he entered, under her direction, into policies that were often opposed to his own convictions; for, if he could be called a diplo-teen years that her husband was ambassador there Prince Lieven died in 1839. For some time there was no accredited Russian Ambassador at the Court of Louis Phillippe, and the delicate negotiations which passed between St. Petersburg and Paris concerning the Eastern Question and the Russo-French allibest to act up to the high standard of intrigue which the Princess Lieven laid down. The Princesses reunions, which had been fre-quented chiefly by Thierists during the reign of the first President of the new Republic, be-came deserted when her patron fell and the began to cabal against Marshal MacMahon's Government. Her own Government had dis-owned her; and she left Paris in disgust, having never achieved more than a sucres d'estime. She is only remembered now-if she is remembered at all-by Frenchmen and Frenchwomen as an agreeable hostess and an accomplished woman. Mme. Novikeff, the O. K. (Olga Kireef) of "Russia and England," has also dabbled a little in journalism; and when London correspondent of the Russ, a Moscow newspaper, furnished her countrymen with some curious notes on the ways and manners and habits of thought, religious and political, of her hosts. Her career in London, her conquest amongst the most perfect and astute statesmen of our time, and her bold and not unsuccessful attempt to make a Russian hundmaid of English High Churchism are too well known to require notice. She has been exceedingly useful to her friends in Russia, and may live to be more useful yet. There is

Memories of the German Conquest-

The Namel's Reens gives some advance sheets of Lucien Bonaparte's memoirs, which Colonel Jung discovered last year in the archives of the War Office, and the Rease des Deux Monaes publishes "Les Trois Voyages a Vers illes." These three journeys were made by M. Cresson, who was Prefect of Police toward the end of the siege of Paris, come in during the armistice to quit the city.

M. Cresson accompanied Jules Favre. He writes down, with the diamond point of wit on his pen, the great Chancellor a great fiar. As they-Favre and Cresson-were on their way to Versailles, St. Cloud was in flames. The horizon was black with the smoke which was thrown up by the burning town and palace. Favre, when he got to his journey's end, and was admitted to an audience with Prince Bismarck, warmly reproached him for the firing, when war was virtually at an end, of St. Cloud. What ensued may now, says the writer, be delivered to the appreciation of historians. The indignant protestation of the French Minister received the following harsh answer, dictated by a feeling of sational ven-geance. "Have you ever," asked the Chan-cellor, visited Germany? Have you not seen there how our castles were ruined by the French? Your armies pitilessly sacked, borned and tore town. You accuse us of filching your timepieces! In Pomerania in a devastated country-house of a poor gentleman, in the time of your Napoleon's successes, an aged man was hiding from the French soldiery. He was taking care of a cradle in which there was a young child. All round the country had been nillaged and devastated.

the country had been pillaged and devastated. The poor devil had nothing of any value, except a silver watch. Your soldiers broke the infant, and the silver watch was torn out of my father's pocket. You were victorious then, and you made us feel it. It was the

Are now in our possession:

If the female diplomatist has been kept more out of sight in the current century, her influence has been none the less felt in foreign politics. She is still a useful intermediary between Minister and Minister; and her salon is eften turned to account as an ambush from which attacks may be directed against States and Cabinets. A proposal to outrage an ally or tear up a treaty coming from her is not so likely to shock diplomatic propriety; and her pen never compromises a Ministry or a Court, for the dullness of Blue and Yellow Books is unrelieved by feminine correspondence. And then a Minister may call upon a lady, however eminent, without the fact being tele-DARK BLUE DENIMS: New Prints, Star Pads, &c.

The Metternichs and Nesselrodes of the last generation were well aware of the value of women's work and wit in international politics. When the Austrian Chancellor was working heart and soul to turn out the pro-Russian Ministry of M. de Martignac in Paris, he called into the requisition the "matinees allemandes" of the Countess Appony; and the share which the Princess Lieven had in the intrigues of 1827, which ended in the resignation of the Duke of Wellington and the short-lived administration of Mr. Canning, is Russian women, from one reason or another, seem at a very early period to have taken men's parts in politics and played them well. They have shown themselves as potient hand maids to statecraft as Frenchwomen to amusement or Italians to art; and, whenever a plot was hatching, from a bedchamber conspiracy to a design against the peace of Europe, a Dashkoff or a Protasoff was sure to be at the Silk Handkerchiefs, Foulards, T. Dashkeff or a Protasoff was sure to be at the Sovereign's elbow doing her part to hold the threads of the intrigue.
